

Preface

At the unimaginable point at which God her/himself decided to expand apart in order to get to know him/herself fully, all of God's creation that makes up the universe was branded with a sexual identity. Metaphysics popularly refers to this energetic or soul aspect of each being as it's second or sexual chakra. Each individual being holds other energy centers or chakras, which govern the other fundamental aspects of their identity. I offer a touchstone explanation of what each chakra represents later in the reflective passages of the book. In order for any individualized entity to connect and be able to experience itself and any other aspect of God, it first does so at the most fundamental level, which is the sexual one. Without a proper understanding of the sacred sexuality of God, we cannot achieve true self-actualization or true mastery in the name of love. Without knowing that the masculine/feminine principle is at the crux of our interrelations even with the self, we build any other understanding on "unstable ground". We can liken it to trying to build a house without first digging the foundation, or baking a cake without first knowing the recipe.

Some popular metaphysical theories revolve around the idea that because all human entities have aspects of the masculine and feminine within themselves, that in order to ascend, or transcend this earthly existence, we must ultimately become androgynous, or in a sense asexual. I believe this to be a falsehood. I believe sexuality serves an enormous God given purpose and that this is the pivotal starting point from which to even know love. My higher wisdom tells me that despite incarnations that each of us experiences as both sexes, we are at our truest "blueprint" soul self, dominant in one or the other sexual trait and will always remain that way. Loving ecstasy and sacred orgasmic bliss comes from the union of the masculine and the feminine. Uncovering our true identities so that we can experience our true selves is the process we engage in here on earth every minute of every day until we are enlightened enough to move on from this school.

This book is written in the feminine style of communicating. It is written in the style of conveying sweeping concentrated truths, rather than giving specific lengthy linear details as would be the masculine style. We are much more used to the masculine model in order to learn and heal. Because the feminine is so badly needing to be fully understood and brought into balance with the masculine, particularly during this transformational time in our planetary history, I believe this book can be a powerful tool to anyone utilizing it as a means for understanding and spiritual growth. The passages are intended to provoke the reader into a contemplative state whereby personal truths about sacred sexuality can be drawn. Specifics (masculine) come as a result of the broader based overall conclusions from the feminine's womb of intuitive understanding. It is utilizing the more common approach to learning of any kind, or healing in reverse. Feminine dominant beings take in masculine data or specifics in a sweeping fashion bringing them into her womb in order to create or "give birth" to an overall conclusion. Masculine dominant beings react to the sweeping conclusions (feminine) in order to process and logically map out the linear specifics.

To help readers make the best use of this book, I feel it is important to relate a very important underlying premise both as to why I wrote it in the first place, and as an overall means to keep in mind when relating to the material. I have come to understand that the core underlying reason why the feminine has been so oppressed and undervalued is, bottom line, because she is feared. She is feared because she is not understood.

To use an analogy, if the male in a relationship is the CEO of a company and is making large sums of money, he is in a sense literally proving his "value" outwardly in an easily accessible way. If the female in the relationship happens to be a stay-at-home mother, most likely she may get some periodic gratitude "ala" pat on the head style, but chances are the truly awesome impact she is having on the man and children in terms of making them feel safe, loved, nurtured, understood, needs being met of an emotional kind..., is being overlooked. Despite the fact that all of these gifts truly and deeply support her family in ways that foster self-esteem and the opportunity to create a true sense of self, and because we cannot accurately access and prove just how much of an impact she is having, her value is not fully honored or known to us. We can't create a graph which clearly indicates that because she gave her son two hugs today, he got three more answers correct on the test he took at school. What we do not fully understand we fear. What we fear we will try to control, invalidate, oppress, run from... consequently we get what we get here on this earth, which is an imbalance between the sacred masculine/feminine connection.

While keeping this fundamental issue in mind, it can then be possible to read the passages in the book, which tend to focus on the healed ways in which to sexually interact and realize from a personal standpoint where things are going well, and where they may need to improve.

YIN YANG BIG BANG

All matter,
our divine souls,
literally everything,
would fly apart and remain that way
if it were not for the masculine/feminine law of attraction binding the "all" together.

"My Cup Runneth Over"--The feminine's rapturous response to the masculine filling her with his awesome, loving, action-oriented energy to the point of orgasmic bliss.

When this bliss reaches a certain peak it moves in a cyclic fashion, in that the feminine begins moving toward her man to make love to him in the feminine dominant style of lovemaking.

This style is one which involves smoldering, deep desire to show genuine gratitude for what her man has offered of himself to her.

Slower, rounder, softer, nurturing, more undulating movement and connection occurs, where the male can lay back and soak it in, allowing himself to be taken care of by the feminine, until his own climactic blissful eruption.

If I have made a healing,
positive connection with you,
I can do nothing but love you eternally and allow that love to grow.
